devoted little time to them and centered his wisdom on the cases that caused interest.

"Jack the Ripper," known by his intimate frineds as King Terry, was sent to the grand jury on the charge of attempting to kill Deodate Londi, in Italian restaurant keeper, at Fifth and Marshall Streets. The Italian had "bounced" the negro from his place on Saturday night. Sunday afternoon the negro sought revenue. He passed Landl's place, suddenly made a lunge at him. The Italian dodged, and in doing so saved his own life, for the negro had a dangerous knife in his hands. As it happened the thrust struck him just under his chin. Dr. Gee attended him, and fixed him up all right.

A. E. Broads was held for a commission of lunacy. He got out in the middle of the street and fired a musket at landom, thinking he was bombarding the Spanish fleet. Officer Shoemater attended to him.
